Mardi Gras Ball Held for Charity by Society Here

Miss Sheppard Takes Place of Miss Cowles as Queen-Latter Ill.

To celebrate the last hours of indulgence before the Lenten season begins to-day there was held last night in the allroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Mardi Gras ball. It was for the Senetit of the Southern Industrial Educational Association, which looks after the children of Southern mountaineers. This entertainment was patterned after that which is given every year in New Orleans and was carried out so far as possible like that of the Southern city.

After several hundred guests had assembled in their seats on the ballroon floor the king, impersonated by Mr. Stafford Keid, took his place on the throne which was erected on the stage of the tallroom. Then a royal procession came down through the middle alsle of the fallroom floor, in which was the queen who was impersonated by Miss Made-iens Sheppard, who at the last moment took the place of Miss Caroline Cowles. unable to appear on account of Illness, the wore a costume of white brocade with long train after the fashion of Marie antelnette, and when she approached throne she was crowned by the ang. Her attendants were Miss Muriel Cakes and Mr. Maitland Belknap, who sirved as the grand duke and duchess of he royal court. There also were in atsendance on the king and queen pages meioding Miss Grace Crossman, Miss nia Sterry, Master Lindsay Wicke, and little Miss Sally Dennett.

There were also in the royal cortege Misses Marie Leary, Adelaide Beddall, Cameron Edson, Edna Hoyt, Ada Heinze, abel MacMillin, Maceleine Reece and Katherine Gossler as maids of honor. Mesers, Stephen T. Hodgman, John New-ington, Henry W. Cohu, Robert Adams, Sheldon Abbett, Emerson MacMillin. Parawell Elliott and L. P. Hollander as leights of honor. There was a quartette of flower girls who strewed flowers in the path of the queen, and they were house Betty Walcott Merchant, Juliet Longfellow, Louise Cunningham and Lee

After the coronation ceremony there was an entertainment before the court. Lucia Chase did a toe dance, and there was a society waltz by Miss Janet shearson and Ma Warren B. Pond. The Columbia University Jazz Band played and Fairfax Burger did some sleight-offessional entertainers also danced, inding Alexis Kosloff, Miss Ruth Hazelton, Miss Florence Walton and Allen Fagan. John Masefield's "The Tragedy of Nan" was acted yesterday afternoon in play has not been heard here since the the leading roles. Yesterday Miss Alexhappy heroine, and it was to display her n the role that this series of perfermances was arranged.

Miss Carlisle has never displayed be fore such variety and depth of talent as the Masefield play evidently inspired the dignity and nobility of the highest tragedy, but it was also human. Her denotement of womanly longing, from its first wistfulness for love to its serene determination on revenge and sacriice, was masterly in its artistic design and prefoundly touching in its effect or the specialor. Miss Carlisle, dominating as her pay icipation in the drama must inevitably e when the heroine is acted by an artist of any pretensions, was not the only impressive actor in the cast. The general representation was on a high plane. John Harwood, as the fiddler on the borderland between reason and fancy recited his visions with stirring effect, possibly attaining greater success in the use of his voice than any of his associates. His description to the despairing Nan of the rising tide coming up to bear one of them away is a scene in the smiled and otherwise sympathized with performance not likely to be forgotten by yesterday's audience. Philip Merivale made a brave figure as the perivale made a brave figure as the perivalence of the process was never of the perivalence of the p fidious Dick.

How actors may be inspired to air high for the sake of such a play, the general effect proclaimed. Miss Beatrice Voyes as the petted daughter, "the litle snake," brought out all the ven and duplicity in the role that contrasted to the simplicity and faith of Nan most skilfully, while Miss Annie Hughes as her mother dinned into the mind of every hearer the releptless persecution that her malignity subcested for the unfortunate daughter of the falsely ac-

Masefield's tragedy is probably boomed to be brought out only for the occasional revelation of an actor's tal-ent. Its bitterness is too repellent to be counteracted by the exquisic lyric beauty of the verse; its hopeless direcon toward disaster for the unhappy heroine too depressing to be tolerated And in its effort at humor in the closing scenes, which is the playwright's complete failure, there is no relief. ing what seemed uncommony slight was President of the Home Jones, Edward D., Kaiser, Phillipina. quette's murder. The mutton pie has often had the effect of killing for many laygoers the beauty of the drama as effectively as it did the young woman forced to eat it. It rarely happens that a masterplece of the modern drama is acted with such rare skill as "The Tragedy of Nan" is by Miss Carlisle and her associates. No lover of the theatre in its best estate ing home. should miss the performance.

After the second intermission in "The Wonderful Thing" in the Playandra Carlisle, who has acted the part lobby hissed, "A French Peg?" and the house last night some authority in the n Boston and elsewhere, was the un- phrase passed through the orchestra stalls during the ensuing act. So Mrs. Bradley had the advantage of putting before the public a heroine easy to classify. It is not the part of a wise playwright to puzzle the spectators.

The attributes of Miss Taylor's fanous creation did not at once suggest hemselves. Miss Jeanne Eagels was a ir her. She gave a superbly moving French orphan who, unlike her proto-and poignant performance. It had all type, did possess a fortune. But she was in an uncongenial English household which sprung from the same good old stage stock that has produced so many proud, more or less off-colored, but nevertheless arrogant, families. She married one of them because she wanted him, and he, in order to protect a scapegrace brother, wanted her money. It was a blow to her pride to learn his otive. It was a solace when he really fell in love with her for her own sake. So there is the eventual happiness after estrangement which is indispensable as the final mood of every play in which there is a Peg of any kind or mone.

Miss Eagels was the life of Mrs. Bradley's somewhat shopworn fable. She gave it indeed all the vitality it possessed. No severe stage manager re-pressed unduly her artistic personality. She spoke with a French accent, twirled her modish skirts and shrugged her shoulders. She smiled and pouted and occasionally wiped tears from the cor-ners of her eyes. Her personality, at once bizarre and piquant, seemed to far-cinate most of the audience, which ordinary kind. There were some of the spectators who could not refrain from the desire to see her interesting and original talents directed by some sort of artistic restraint) But the public deighted in her as she was.

Mrs. Bradley's actors were generally competent. Two sisters, sharp tongued at first, but ultimately loving, were at first, but ultimately loving, were at first, but ultimately loving, were amusingly played by Gladys Maude and Jane Marbury. Gordon Ash was a sympathetic hero, while other parts were well played by Henry Duffey, Fred Tiden, Edward Lester and Miss Olive Bailey, Howard F. Bayne, Bertha D. L., Belloni, Leopeldo, Leo

Capt. Leopoldo Belloni, formerly an officer in the Royal Italian Flying Corps and a member of the engineering corps of his army, for the last several months United States representative of the Caproni Airplane Company, died of pneumonia yesterday at the Rits-Carlton Hotel after fourteen days' illness. A requiem mass will be held at 11 o'clock to the company of the control of the contro to-morrow morning at St. Patrick's Ca-thedral, Lady's Chapel.

Capt. Belloni in the early days of the war was one of Italy's most widely known aviators, and through his efforts much impetus was added to the attempts of the different flyers to cross the At-lantic Ocean. He was one of the first to announce publicly that there was no doubt in his mind that a Caproni machine, driven by himself, could cross the Atlantic without a stop,

He came to the United States with an Italian Mission in 1918 and soon time. She was Irish. But there have after announced his engagement to Miss Harrietto A. Post, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Post of S East Fiftyfirst street. The engagement was broappeared in the recurring drama. It is ken off in April, 1919, in an announce not possible to recall just now a Yid-ment by the parents of the young wom ment by the parents of the young womoffered. It was Capt. Bellont who made th rather startling announcement in 1918 that the sale of American airplanes to Europeans and the delivering of then to Europeans under their own power was not a dream, but a certainty. He was born in Milano 32 years ago.
